1. At a meeting of Chinese Communist Central Government authorities during the evening of 28 May 1951 it was decided to send two more Chinese Communist armies from Southwest China to North Korea soon.
2. In late May training of militiamen was being rushed in Manchuria.¹ Most rural primary schools were being used as military training centers. Three hours of military training were given daily. Trainees were returning home and going to their jobs each day.
3. In early June the rear office² of the 15 Army was at Antung.³ The "51 Unit" is the code designation for this army.⁴
4. In early June the administrative office of the 21 Artillery Division was at Fouhsin (121-39, 42-03).
5. On 17 May 100 x T-34 tanks arrived in Mukden by rail from the Harbin direction. The tanks were being assembled in an auto factory west of the Mukden railroad.
6. In late May Huangkut'un (123-28, 41-49) Railroad Station, near Mukden, was an important supply depot for the Chinese Communists and North Koreans. From 1 to 15 April approximately one thousand trucks arrived in this area from the USSR.
7. In late May a "temporary" arsenal was being operated by the North Korean Army at Chian (126-10, 41-07), Manchuria, on the Sino-Korean border. It produced small arms and ammunition.⁵

8. Recently⁶ LIAO Heng-lu (廖享禄), head of the "cadre administration" of the Pingyuan Military District, was killed during a United Nations air raid in Korea while in command of a Chinese Communist medical unit in that area.⁷
9. On 25 May the third group of medical personnel recruited in the Tientsin area for service in Korea left Tientsin for Korea. They took along medical supplies which the Chinese Communist authorities had compelled the Tientsin residents to contribute. The compulsory contribution caused much resentment against Chinese Communist authorities among Tientsin residents.
10. In late May, because of the shortage of medical personnel, Chinese Communist authorities were conscripting an undetermined number of such personnel from almost all hospitals in Manchuria and North China.
11. On 15 June, at a "medical group leaders conference" convened in Mukden by the health section of the Northeast Military District Command, it was decided to send the following three groups of casualties of the Korean war from Mukden to Chungking via Hankow:
 - a. The first group of 330 men were scheduled to leave on 30 June.
 - b. The second and third groups, totaling 670, were scheduled to leave between 1 and 10 July.

1. Comment. concerning recruiting to replace militia sent to the field armies.
2. Comment. Perhaps this refers to rear headquarters.
3. Comment. According to information available as of 6 June all divisions of this army were in Korea. 25X1
4. Comment. The rear offices of the 37 and 73 Units have also been reported at Antung; 25X1A
5. Comment. a North Korean arsenal moved to Kuantien (124-46, 40-44).
6. Comment. Presumably in May.
7. Comment. As a result, medical personnel in Tientsin are afraid to go to Korea.
